

Speaking and Listening Activities

In this pack you will find three different activities that are all designed to improve your speaking and listening skills. Through using language and hearing how others use it, you will be able to describe the world, make sense of life's experiences and improve your confidence. These activities will provide opportunities for you to develop and improve some extremely important speaking, listening and thinking skills. We hope you enjoy them.

Speaking and listening games to develop reading and writing

Construct some conjunctions chains

Using conjunctions is a good game to play. It is where you say half a sentence with a conjunction, such as 'I really wanted to get a dog, however...' and then try to finish the sentence verbally. Try to finish the sentence in as many ways as possible.

Super-charge adjectives and adverbs

Expand your vocabulary, find various pictures from books and magazines. Describe the picture using the best five adjectives you can think of. If there is any movement in the picture, could you use a powerful verb to describe it? Could you add an adverb to this? See if you can plan a story (in writing) centred on this picture, and then present the story verbally to someone in your family.

Discuss current events

Look at non-fiction texts and talk about the way it is laid out. For example: look at a newspaper article and see if you can name any of the features of the text (headline, picture, caption, paragraph, quotations). Read through the newspaper article and see if you can sum up verbally what it was about to someone in your family.

Start a debate

Debates are an excellent way of finding your voice through sharing opinions and facts, but it also helps you find your ears too by patiently listening and respecting the views of others. Suggest a topic you have an opinion about and debate this at home. It's a great way of getting the whole family involved and you will certainly improve your confidence in your communication skills. You never know, you might find you are a budding politician when sitting at the dinner table.

It may be a good idea for you think of a subject, for example: discussing whether technology is good for children, or whether the lottery is a good idea. Encourage your parents and other family members to say what they think and back up their opinion with plenty of examples.

Be persuasive

For another challenging exercise, find an item in the house that they must try to sell to a family member. Look at adverts, highlighting persuasive words and phrases that they use. Then write a 'pitch' and attempt to memorise it! Present your pitch to a family member and get them to ask you plenty of questions which you need to think up the answers to, can you convince them that your product is the best? If you have a brother or sister, you could ask them to be rival salesperson! This is fun and lively activity and you could even use your computing skills to design a PowerPoint presentation to support your pitch!

Use your senses

You need to work in at groups of two or more for these activities. They are all linked to using a specific sense. We hope you enjoy them.

Sound mapping

Sense: hearing

Skills: responding to instructions, participating in discussion

What you'll need:

An outdoor space

A2 or A3 sheets of paper

Marker pens

How to play:

Lie on the ground looking at the sky and close your eyes and spend 60 seconds listening. Count how many sounds you can hear. The longer you wait, the more sounds you might notice

Can you create a map of all the sounds you hear? Create the maps on large sheets of paper. Can you draw the outline of a person in your family in the centre and write all the sounds you heard in the surrounding space, drawing arrows from the person to each sound. The length of the arrow should represent the distance from the source of the sound (short for close, long for far away) and the thickness of the arrow should represent the volume (thick for loud and thin for quiet).

Feely bags

Sense: touch

Skills: asking relevant questions, giving structured descriptions, participating in discussions.

What you'll need:

Items from nature – pine cones, tree bark, pebbles, sticks, leaves and so on.

A large bag

How to play:

Fill a bag with a number of natural items. There should be five different types of item and enough in total for each person who is playing to have three items each. However, ensure that you have an unequal number of each item, eg seven pine cones, nine pebbles, seven sticks, eight leaves and five pieces of tree bark.

Blindfold one of you and pass the bag around. Each person picks the first three items they touch. You can touch and investigate all of their items (without looking at them) but cannot pass them to anyone else. Through discussion, you must determine the five different types of item and the quantity of each.

Crisp tasting

Sense: taste

Skills: asking relevant questions, articulating answers and opinions.

What you'll need:

Bags of crisps (assorted flavours)

Small plastic containers or bags eg yoghurt pots or zip-lock bags

How to play:

You will need a few large bags of different flavoured crisps. Split the crisps into small containers (without seeing what the flavours are), and distribute the containers amongst you so each person playing has three or more different containers. Everyone must then work out how many different flavours of crisps there are, and what flavours they have in their containers.

The catch is that you cannot eat your own crisps! You must approach another player, ask them to eat one of their crisps and then ask them questions about the crisp for the player to answer. They can then return the favour with one of their crisps. There should be a list of 'taboo' words to stop players simply saying 'it's cheese and onion!'

Pongy perfumes

Sense: smell

Skills: gaining and maintaining the attention of listeners, giving structured descriptions and explanations.

What you'll need:

Plastic cups

Strongly scented items from nature – flowers, pine needles and so on

How to play:

You will need be in pairs and each pair needs a plastic cup. The task is for pairs to create a unique perfume in their cup by finding natural items and mixing them all together with some 'pixie juice' (water with food colouring!). When you have created your perfumes, each pair must then come up with a sales pitch to try and persuade the other pair to buy their perfume. The pitch should describe the scent, explain why you picked the ingredients you did and convince the other pair that this is the next big thing.

Un-nature trail

Sense: sight

Skills: articulating answers, giving structured explanations.

What you'll need:

An outdoor space to plan a short trail

Man-made objects – bricks, toys, cardboard boxes and so on

How to play:

Choose a short route to follow for your trail – through some woods or a green space. Along the trail, place a number of un-natural things: bricks, toys, cardboard boxes and so on. Take a family member on a walk along the route. The family member must spot as many un-natural items as they can. Then ask them to clean up all the unnatural items, but only by picking items that answer your questions. For example, ask them to bring back the most useful item they can find. When they have returned ask them to explain why they selected that item ('it's all that was left' is not a good enough answer!).

Thinking Games

These questions are designed to get you thinking about your answers and be able to give reasons for your choices.

If you have a printer at home then ask if you can print them out. Then you can cut around the question and mix them up so you are not sure what question could come next.

See if you can play with different people in your house as it is interesting to listen to their answers. Maybe you will change your thinking by listening to them? You could even ask a question to someone you speak to on the phone or on a zoom call. It will spark a debate and great conversation.

Enjoy 😊
